Prior to these appointments, Mr Loh was the President and CEO of Qimonda AG, Munich, Germany. Qimonda AG was a memory company that was spun-off from Infineon Technologies in 2006, to form at the time the second largest Dynamic random-access memory (DRAM) company in the world. Prior to the spin-off, Mr Loh was the Executive Vice President, Communications Group of Infineon Technologies AG, Munich Germany.

Previously, Mr Loh served in a variety of capacities at Siemens AG. In 1997, Mr. Loh was the first member from the Asia staff to be appointed a Managing Director of Siemens Microelectronics. While he was in charge of the production of Siemens Components Singapore, he was instrumental in setting up the production facilities in Batam, Indonesia and Wuxi, China. In 1995, he received the Siemens Semiconductor Total Quality Management Award, the highest accolade worldwide conferred by the Siemens Semiconductor Group.

Mr Loh has an honours degree in chemical engineering from the University of Malaya, Kuala Lumpur and a Post graduate certified diploma in accounting and finance from ACCA, United Kingdom.

AEM's Executive Chairman, Mr Loke Wai San commented, "It is with great honour that we welcome Kin Wah onto the Board at AEM. Kin Wah is a globally respected veteran in the semiconductor industry with over three decades of international experience at the most senior levels. Over the years, he has seen multiple technology disruptions as well as innovations throughout the semiconductor value-chain. We look forward to working closely with Kin Wah and believe the staff and management of AEM will benefit greatly from his insights."
